Infrastructures of high importance are in different phases of transformation driven by the growing use of communication and other IT solutions. The society and the economics of countries or even continents depend on the reliable, contentious operation of these systems, so securing their operation and ensuring safe and robust operation is of national importance.

The main driver of change is communication: introduction of new services, more efficient operations, utilizing other infrastructures to solve challenges are all pointing towards a more interconnected ecosystem of technical solutions.

The interaction from the field level up to cloud services offers great opportunities and challenges.

The special track invites authors to contribute with their unpublished papers in the following, but not limited to topic areas:

- Authentication and authorization across systems
- Securing Machine to Machine communication
- Robust and secure remote management and monitoring of critical infrastructures
- Internet of Things and Cloud computing: securing and composing new services
- securing smart grids, water, gas, telephony and other critical infrastructures and their inter dependencies
- Quality of Service, Network Function Virtualization and automatic resource management in critical infrastructures
